Gr. 1-3. Named the Greatest Horse of the Century in 1999, Man o' War began as a wobbly colt ("He would not slow down / long enough to be trained"), but grew up to win all the big races and break all the world records. In this entry in the Step into Reading series, McKerley tells his story in crisp prose set down on the page in short lines.

THE QUESTION: Which was the greatest race horse of all ...

Still considered by many to be the best American racehorse of all time, Man o' War was put to the test only twice in his career: once when a closing second to Upset in the Sanford Memorial Stakes after a poor start and a bad trip, and once when conceding 18 pounds to the speedy John P. Grier in the Dwyer Stakes. At his best "Big Red" was simply untouchable despite enormous weight concessions, winning easily and giving the impression that he could have done much more.

Man o' War (horse) - American Classic Pedigrees

Man o' War's best friend was a show hunter. In addition to racehorses, Samuel Riddle owned show horses, including a 16.3 hand gelding named Major Treat. After a leg injury ended the horse's show career at the age of 11 in 1918, Man o' War's trainer, Louis Feustel, asked for the sturdy horse as his own mount.
