Posted on August 20, 2017 by Karen Van Drie. 'Never Regret the Pain' by Sel Erder Yackley. Sel Erder Yackley is a native Türk — an immigrant and now a citizen of America. I had the chance to hear her sharing memories of living with a bipolar spouse. Her black and white book cover looked awfully grim, the title even grimmer, and the subject did nothing to make me say, "gee, I can't wait to read that."

Pain Of A Broken Heart, Goodbye Love Poem

I do not regret how I handled the 17 months of our separation. Because during this time, I have grown into someone I never knew I could be. Or wanted to be. I have done things that showed me I will be okay. I will move forward with my life in a much better way than I was living. I do not hate the pain or suffering I endured by him.

About five months into our relationship, I came to see his problems with alcohol and I have continued to watch him struggle with it. We talk all the time about how he is going through something that I will never be able to fathom, but he doesn't get what it's like for me. He says my life is easier than his. I say he's wrong.

Loving An Alcoholic Will Hurt Like Hell | Thought Catalog

In a loving relationship, there are often hurt feelings. We have certain expectations of our partner, and when they do not live up to them we are likely to feel a sense of betrayal. The truth is that if we put our hurt aside for a moment we may realize that our lover was not even aware of the expectations that we had for them.

Despite the depths of my heartache though, I will never regret bringing Georgie into my life. I know people often roll their eyes when others refer to their pets as children, but as a mother of two young children, I can wholeheartedly say that I raised, cared for, and loved George like a child. It is the only way I knew how to love him.
