The Boy That Never Was is that powerful thing, a beautifully written mystery driven by its exploration of the characters' innermost hearts - of the inexorable ripples that loss sends out, and the terrible damage people can do to those they love most. Both as a crime novel and as an emotional journey, it's gripping stuff (Tana French)

Wasn't the happy ending I was expecting and this showed great insight by the author into human nature, how an event like this would cause dramatic emotional damage to all concerned that would likely never heal no matter what the final outcome. The very final twist at the end left me a bit confused, just made an unbelievable story even more so.

The Boy Who Never Was is less crime fiction than a story of grief and redemption, but with a mystery at its core. Such films were, and still are, the light of my life - 'The Boy Who Never Was' being my favourite one. Andy Crane introduced it, when he presented in the broom cupboard. I can even recite the whole film, oh yes. I have subjected many friends to this film, at least the ones with good taste and an appreciation for the finer things in life.
