In his magisterial study of the mid-Victorian generation, Theo Hoppen identifies three defining themes.The first he calls 'established industrialism' - the growing acceptance that factory life and manufacturing had come to stay. It was during these four decades that the balance of employment shifted irrevocably.

The Mid-Victorian Generation, 1846-1886. The third defining theme is that of `interlocking spheres' which the author uses to illuminate the formation of public culture in the period. This, he argues, was generated not by a series of influences operating independently from each other, but by a variety of intermeshed political, economic,scientific,...

That it barely does Although Hoppen's narrative begins a quarter century earlier with the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846, it also concludes much earlier, with the failure of Gladstone's first Home Rule Bill four decades later. We are left, as it were, without late Victorian and Edwardian coverage which may occur in a later volume.
